

Zhihui Li is now an assistant professor and project manager at the Research Laboratory on Environmental Management, Institute of Geographic Sciences and Natural Resources Research, Chinese Academy of Sciences. Dr. Li received bachelor's degree in geographic science and management science from Wuhan University, and received the Ph.D. degree in cartography and geography information system in University of Chinese Academy of Sciences. She was a visiting researcher in University of California, Berkely in 2016. She has over years of experiences in environmental monitoring and assessment, ecosystem services trade-off analysis, land use modelling and analysis, water management and development of strategies for regional sustainable development.